

Graduate Program in Literature and Linguistics

This doctoral program offers advanced literary education to those who have finished their master's studies in (a) Japanese language and literature, (b) English and American literature, and (c) foreign/second language education. The students will strive to acquire advanced knowledge and skills in one of the three areas, gain diverse academic perspectives, and prepare themselves to play major roles in the related professional fields. Strong candidates for admission are Japanese or foreign students—including those who currently hold professional positions—who have strong research backgrounds and are highly motivated to further their education and contribute to the betterment of society.