

Graduate Program in Social Welfare

This program accepts students who have finished the basic studies in social welfare and are highly motivated to acquire the latest information and more advanced knowledge in the same area and polish their research techniques. Strong candidates for admission are:

1. students who intend to become researchers or professional workers in the related fields;
2. students who intend to further their education by studying abroad as exchange students;
3. students who intend to learn research methods for academic studies or case studies;
or,
4. active professional workers in the field of social welfare who plan to train younger researchers or professionals in social welfare or other related areas.